Add comment.A small state like California has the potential to make a big move in bringing in what some might say are the most qualified, experienced candidates to step into a top-level position in their state. In order for the California's state to see the kind of change that they want, they would have to do something that's really hard to do. That's the changeover in Gov. Gavin Newsom's top staff. In the wake of Monday's resignation of the administration's special advisor on climate change, the state's highest level of diversity has been a main focus for the new governor. "The Department of Resources [and] Recycling has a great history of diversity, gender parity, and they've been pioneers in many areas. I'm humbled to be part of that legacy and look forward to working with them for the next few months," said Ellen Wolf, the incoming executive director, in a news release. Wolf brings a lot of experience to the position and a history of doing big projects with a number of agencies and interests. She's the outgoing executive director of the California Fair Political Practices Commission and the former deputy secretary of the California Department of Transportation. She's also worked for
